* Performance of TOPIX Net TR index since inception is shown in yen

In a period of increased volatility for the stock market and continued strength in the yen, TOPIX recorded a decline of 2.9% for August in local terms. In the first three trading days of the month the index fell over 20%, which included its second largest daily fall ever, as investors digested the BoJ's increase in short term interest rates to 0.25% announced at the end of July and due to a concern over a potential slowing in the US economy. A speech by Deputy Governor Uchida, who indicated that the Bank would maintain its easy monetary policy whilst global markets remained volatile, then prompted a recovery.

Prime Minister Kishida, influenced by his poor approval ratings, announced that he would not contest September's LDP leadership election. At this stage, there is no clear candidate to succeed him but the government's main policies seem unlikely to change whoever wins.

Second quarter GDP rose by 3.1% on an annualised basis driven mainly by stronger consumer spending and capex. Wages grew by 4.5% in June thanks to bonuses and, although only a single month, this is the highest rate of growth since 1997. In addition, the National Personnel Authority recommended that wages should rise by 4.4% for Japan's public sector workers in the current fiscal year. This rise would be the highest for over thirty years and applies to just over 3m public employees. In particular, starting salaries for new graduates will rise by 15% following a 6% rise last year.

Corporate results for the first quarter of the new fiscal year have been slightly better than expected. More of our companies revised up than down, although the majority left their full year forecasts unchanged. Specialty chemicals company Adeka revised up its profit estimate for March 2025 after reporting recurring profit growth of 19% in the quarter. Honda reported a record quarter for profits thanks to strong sales of its hybrid cars, which are second only to Toyota globally. Notably, companies in the TOPIX index are still using an FX assumption of ¥145/$ on average, similar to the current level.

Shareholder returns continued to rise at our companies as they make better use of their cash rich balance sheets. Even at this early stage of the year, a handful of companies have already revised up their estimated dividends. Dividend growth in aggregate for the portfolio is now forecast to be 15% this year. Share buybacks have also been substantial both in number and size. Over a third of the companies in the portfolio have announced them since April and the average size has been more than 5% of shares outstanding. In August there were large buybacks from Artience (8%) and Inpex (5%), both of which have been regular and significant buyers of their own shares.

Canadian retailer Alimentation Couche-Tard has made a preliminary bid for Seven & I, which has a market cap of $37bn. If this offer succeeds it would be the largest foreign takeover of a Japanese company. The unsolicited bid is being assessed by a special committee set up by Seven & I in line with the new corporate takeover guidance issued in 2023 by METI. So far this year there have been 14 takeovers of listed Japanese firms by foreign companies. A second significant deal announced this month was the $4bn agreed acquisition of Fujisoft, a software developer, by private equity firm KKR at a PBR of 4.3x. Interestingly, an activist investor had proposed that the company should go private at last year's AGM, an option that was subsequently recommended by a special committee set up to assess the proposal.

Valuations remain attractive with the portfolio standing at a PBR of 0.84x and a PER of under 11x. Our companies are continuing to improve their shareholder returns, spurred by pressure from investors and the TSE, while a more active M&A market will also help to realise the value in the portfolio.
